

As a recent XM subscriber, I have pretty much given up on broadcast radio. The fault for this does not lie with XM. It lies with broadcast radio. The loosening of media ownership rules has led to bland, cookie-cutter stations with no real choice. There is no variety. XM has brought back the golden days of radio, when people took chances.

Please do not allow the NAB to stifle choice. They have absolutely no right to dictate what I hear. I very much value XM's traffic and weather reports as I travel, as well as their music variety. Please do not allow the NAB to bully you into preventing XM from providing this service. The government needs to spend time on real issues, not on whether Clear Channel's executives are going to be able to get an extra million dollars in their bonus this year.
